

ABSTRACT

The loss of photogenerated electrons to surface electron-hole recombination sites is minimized by utilizing a first p-type surface region
5 to form a depletion region that functions as a first barrier that repels photogenerated electrons from the surface recombination sites, and a second p-type surface region that provides a substantial change in the dopant concentration.

10